

Dydd Maurth 21 Mai

Rapidly racing, Louis and Eleanor jumped furiously into the good glory car-park. Shooked, they both nervously looked up in terror at what seemed the biggest building they had ever discovered, however we all knew that this giant building was a supermarket. How would they ever find Jacob in this death trap?

As they stood in the middle of the rotating ~~door~~ bunny churning doors their misery grew. They must get through but they had no clue how to accomplish this competitive goal. In an instant, Louis caught sight on his salvation, a little girl was about to enter the store, she was carrying a small puppet doll. It shall be now or never!

With a tremendous effort they both hopped themselves into the scary, talking puppet doll. The doll had cotton yellow hair with glass green eyes. It was wearing a ballet dress and a backpack. It was giant inside, full of bunny killer and a nose gadget. When they were secured inside the two bunnys jumped for self-determination. Amazed and stunned they viewed in wonder at the sight before their eyes. There was arctic ice shelves in a cuberoo keeping chicken frozen without magic. An enormous human teleporter which captures everyone. However the most terrifying human display of sharp, spiky gardening weapons. They hoped the humans should never ever use these against them.

Jacob was sneaking silently towards the freezer cabinet. To his surprise he saw his perfect opportunity, unguarded chicken. He approached his target, with caution, anxiously he waited for the foolish humans to open the cabinet door. He dived like a dolphin diving for it's food on to the shelf surrounded by chicken. He was ready to start his plan even though nerves took over him. He ripped it, he dragged it. It's time...

Louis and Elenor were getting anxious. They had been searching for hours. Suddenly they ~~had~~ tripped upon what they were looking for. Desperately they ran closer, closer and closer. To their fright they observed that something was wrong. Jacob was stood very still a straight, high up on the biggest freezer cabinet. He was trapped in the sheet of solid ice, joined to a chicken packet by what seemed unbelievably like... Well you can certainly predict. They both rapidly raced up to the freezer and impatiently waited for the horrible humans to open it. Without them being spotted they hopped in, crept up and stepped foot on the shelf before Jacob's pury feet. They clucked his shoulders with their hands. They wiggled him, wiggled him and wiggled him. Crack. Finally Jacob was still shivering cold and unusually quiet. They must warm him up soon.

As a result the two bunnys heavily breathed as they pulled Jacob out of the market. Luckily they all managed to escape the human death traps without being caught by the horrendous humans. As they appeared into the light Jacob began to warm up like the world on a cheerful, hot summers day.
Louis squered with fury at his cousins recklessness. To their suprise he sorrowfully apologised for putting their lives at risk.
Louis was thankful but distrustful as he knew that this probably wouldn't be the last time he would do something so stupid.